Dr. Elbert Ainstein has pushed the boundaries of intelligence: he graduated MIT's PhD computer science program at 16 and has received numerous awards for his contributions to the field.

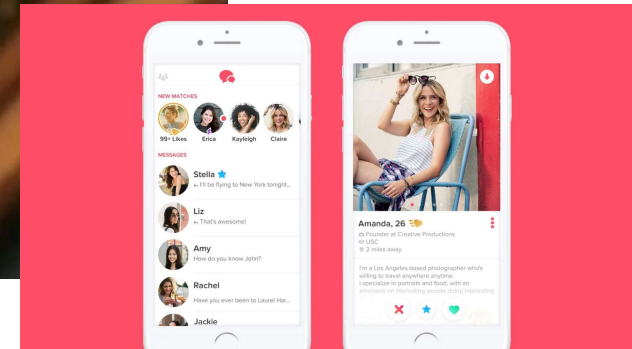

Problem is, Dr. Elbert Einstein has spent his whole life with his nose in a book, and he is lacking in the emotional intelligence department. He has zero friends, and his closest friend is a robot he made when he was 9. Talk about a loser.

I can help others in need with my intelligence!

Dr. Elbert Ainstein does have a good heart though! He figures he could use his passion for computer science to help those who need help!

He wants to tutor those in need!

Dr. Elbert Einstein finds this new app called "Study Buddies" that allows him to easily find groups of struggling students to tutor for upcoming exams.

Dr. Elbert Einstein creates a new group of "study buddies" to teach and makes friends with!
Look at how popular he is now!

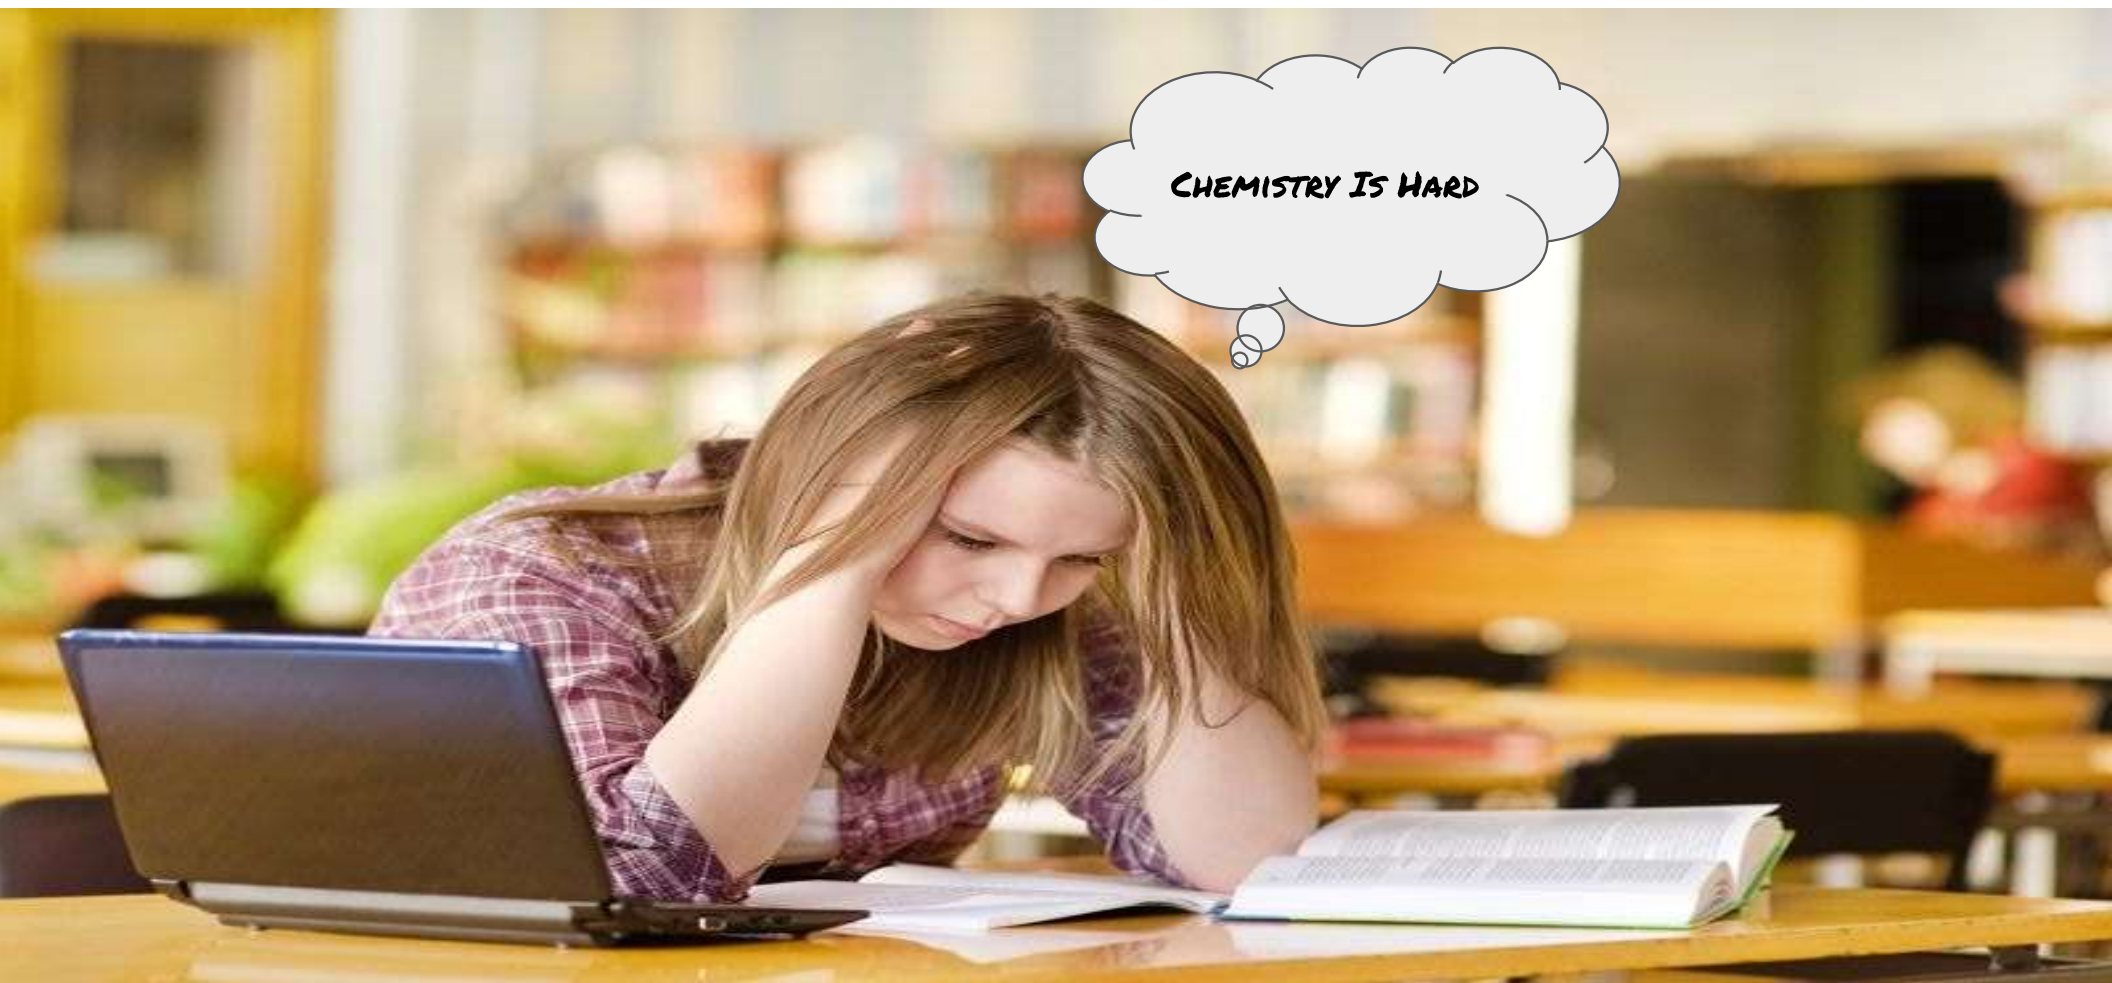

Thanks to the genius of Dr. Elbert Einstein, all the students are able to pass the exam with flying colors. Thanks Elbert Einstein!

Now Elbert Einstein has a ton of friends, and he's looking to make even more with the help of Study Buddies!

Study Buddys

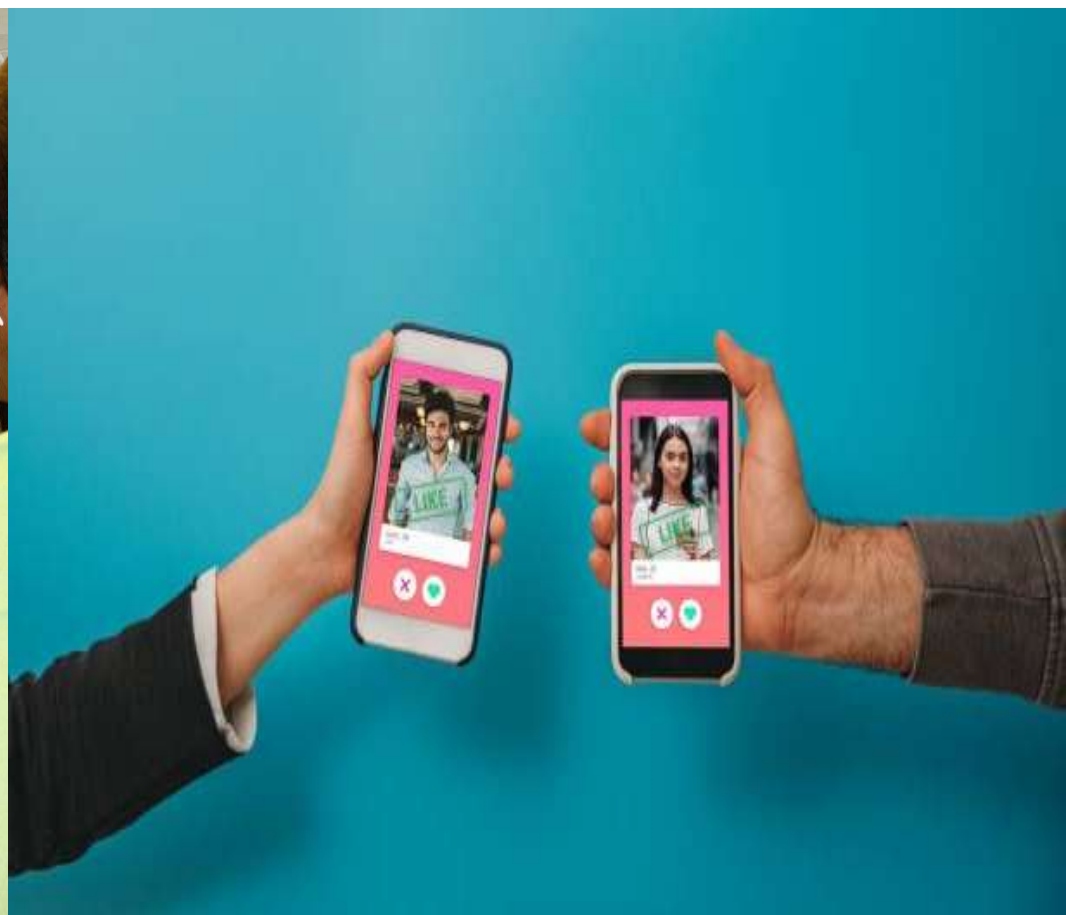

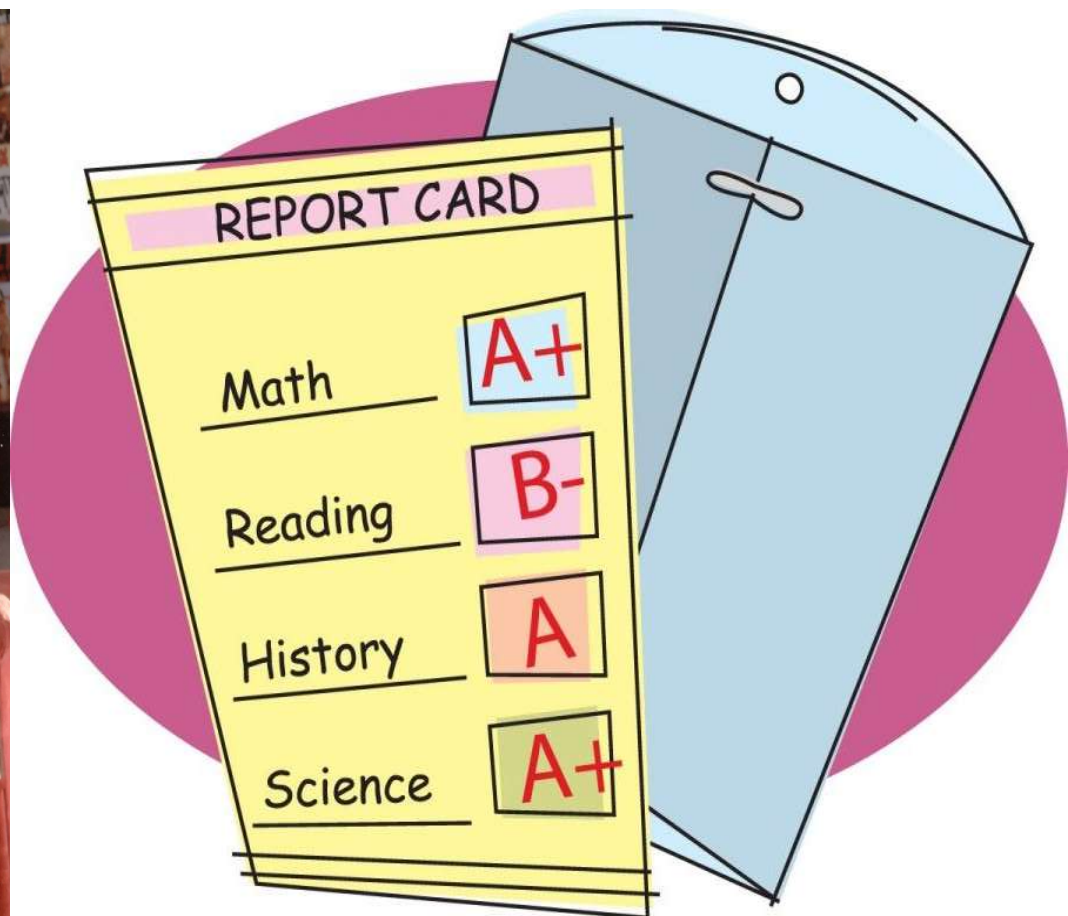

Miranda is having difficulty in her CHEM Class and wants to find other students to study with, however she is new to campus and doesn't know very many people.

Luckily, Miranda's roommate introduces her to the app StudyBuddys. She has been using the app for some time now and found it incredibly useful.

StuddyBuddys acts as a academic tinder. Miranda was matched with other students that are taking or had taken the CHEM class. They were more than willing to invite her to their study group formed by the app.

As Miranda continues matching with more and more students; she's notices her grades are getting better. Also, she has met plenty of new people and made some friends along the way.

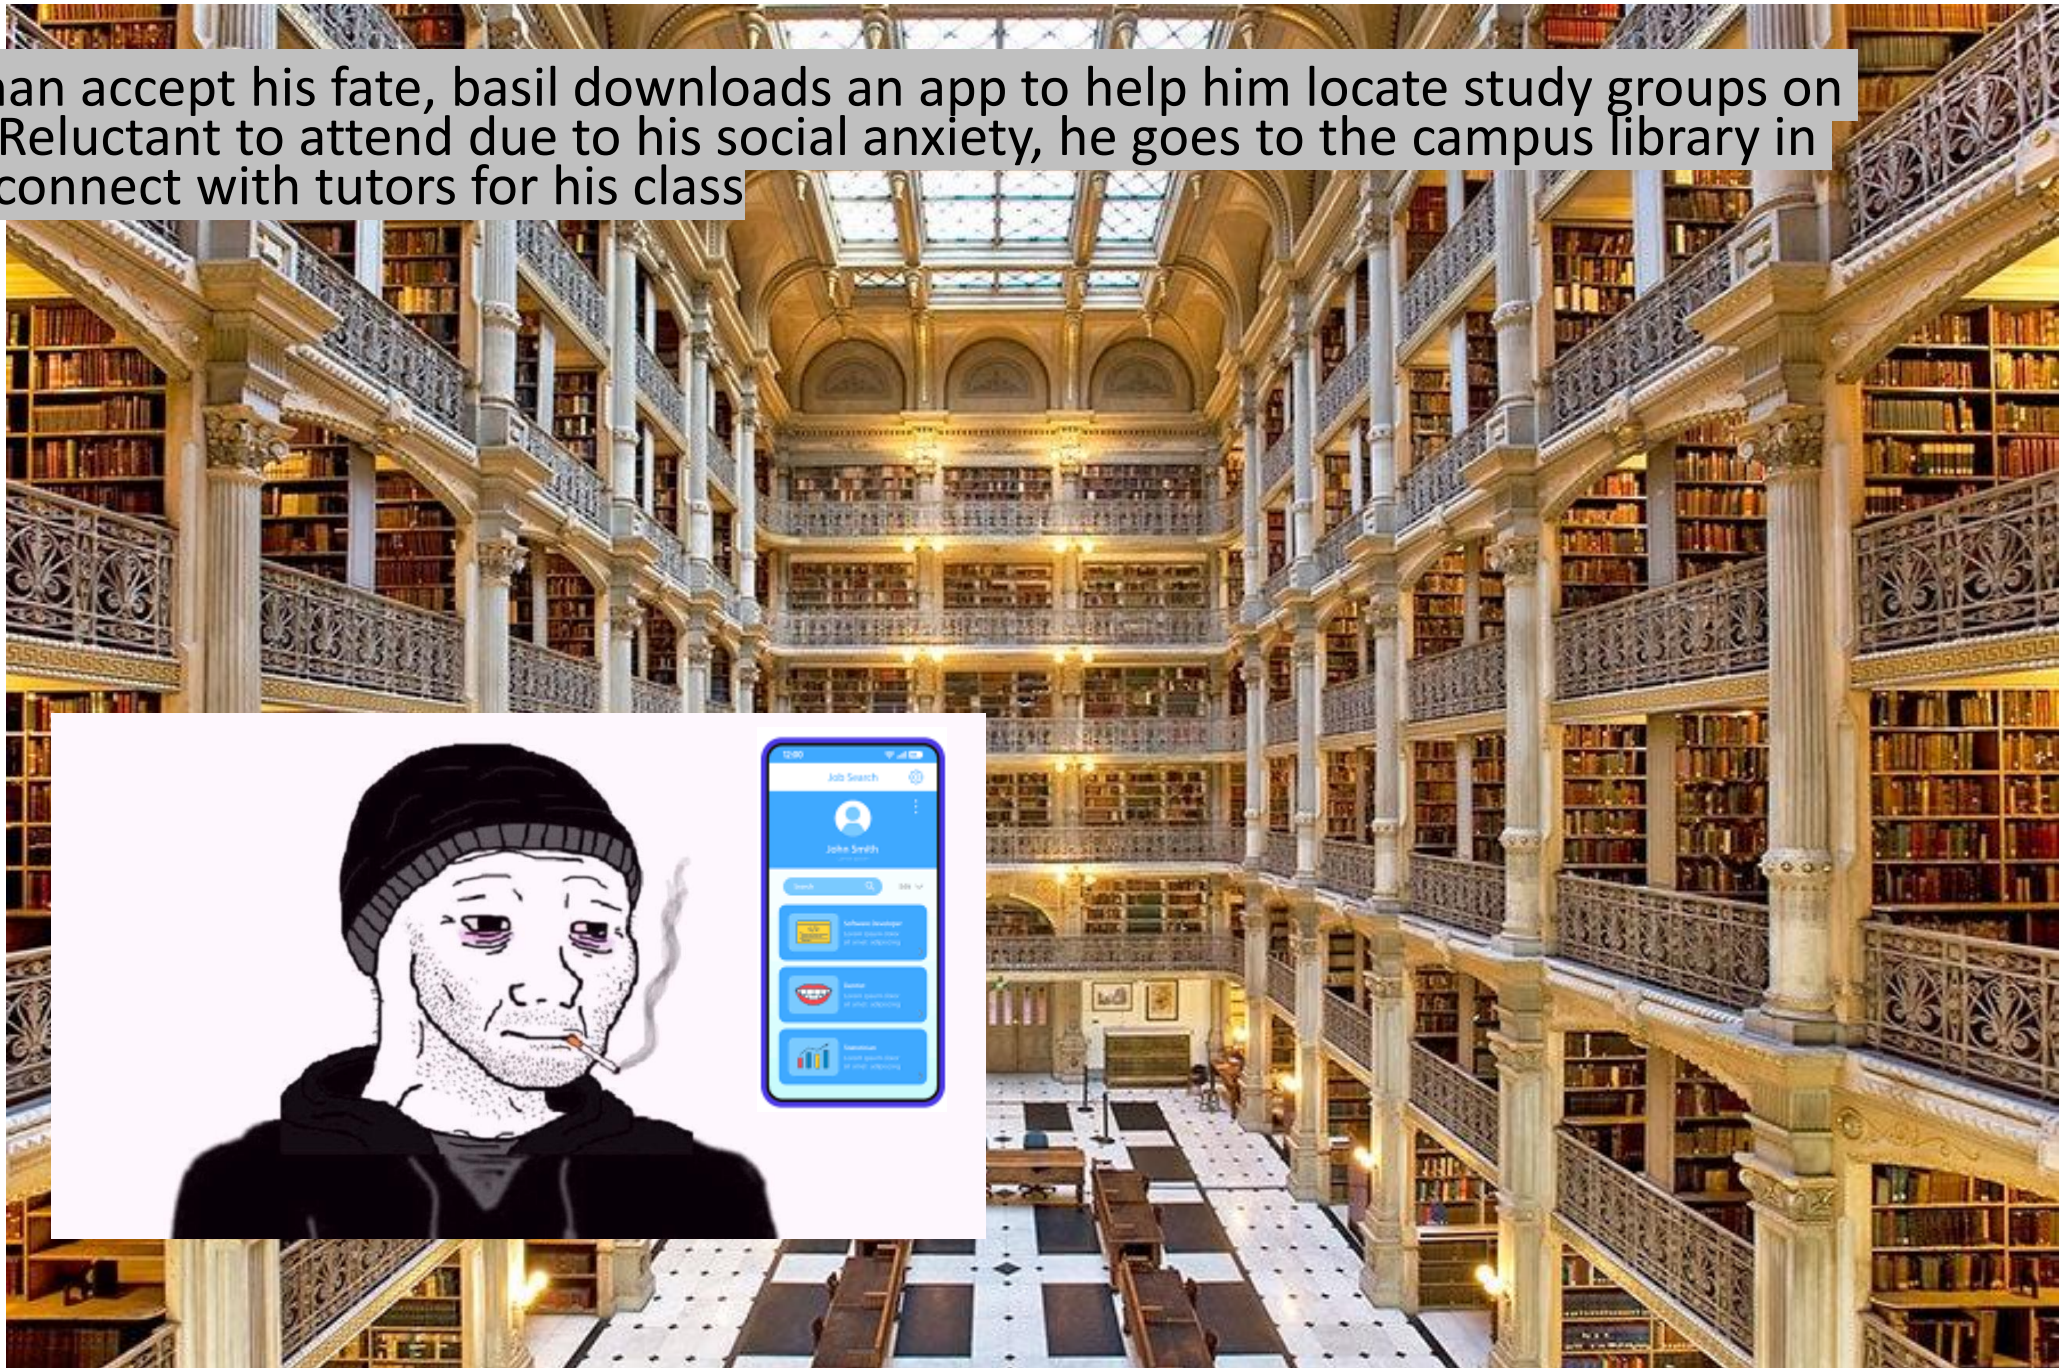

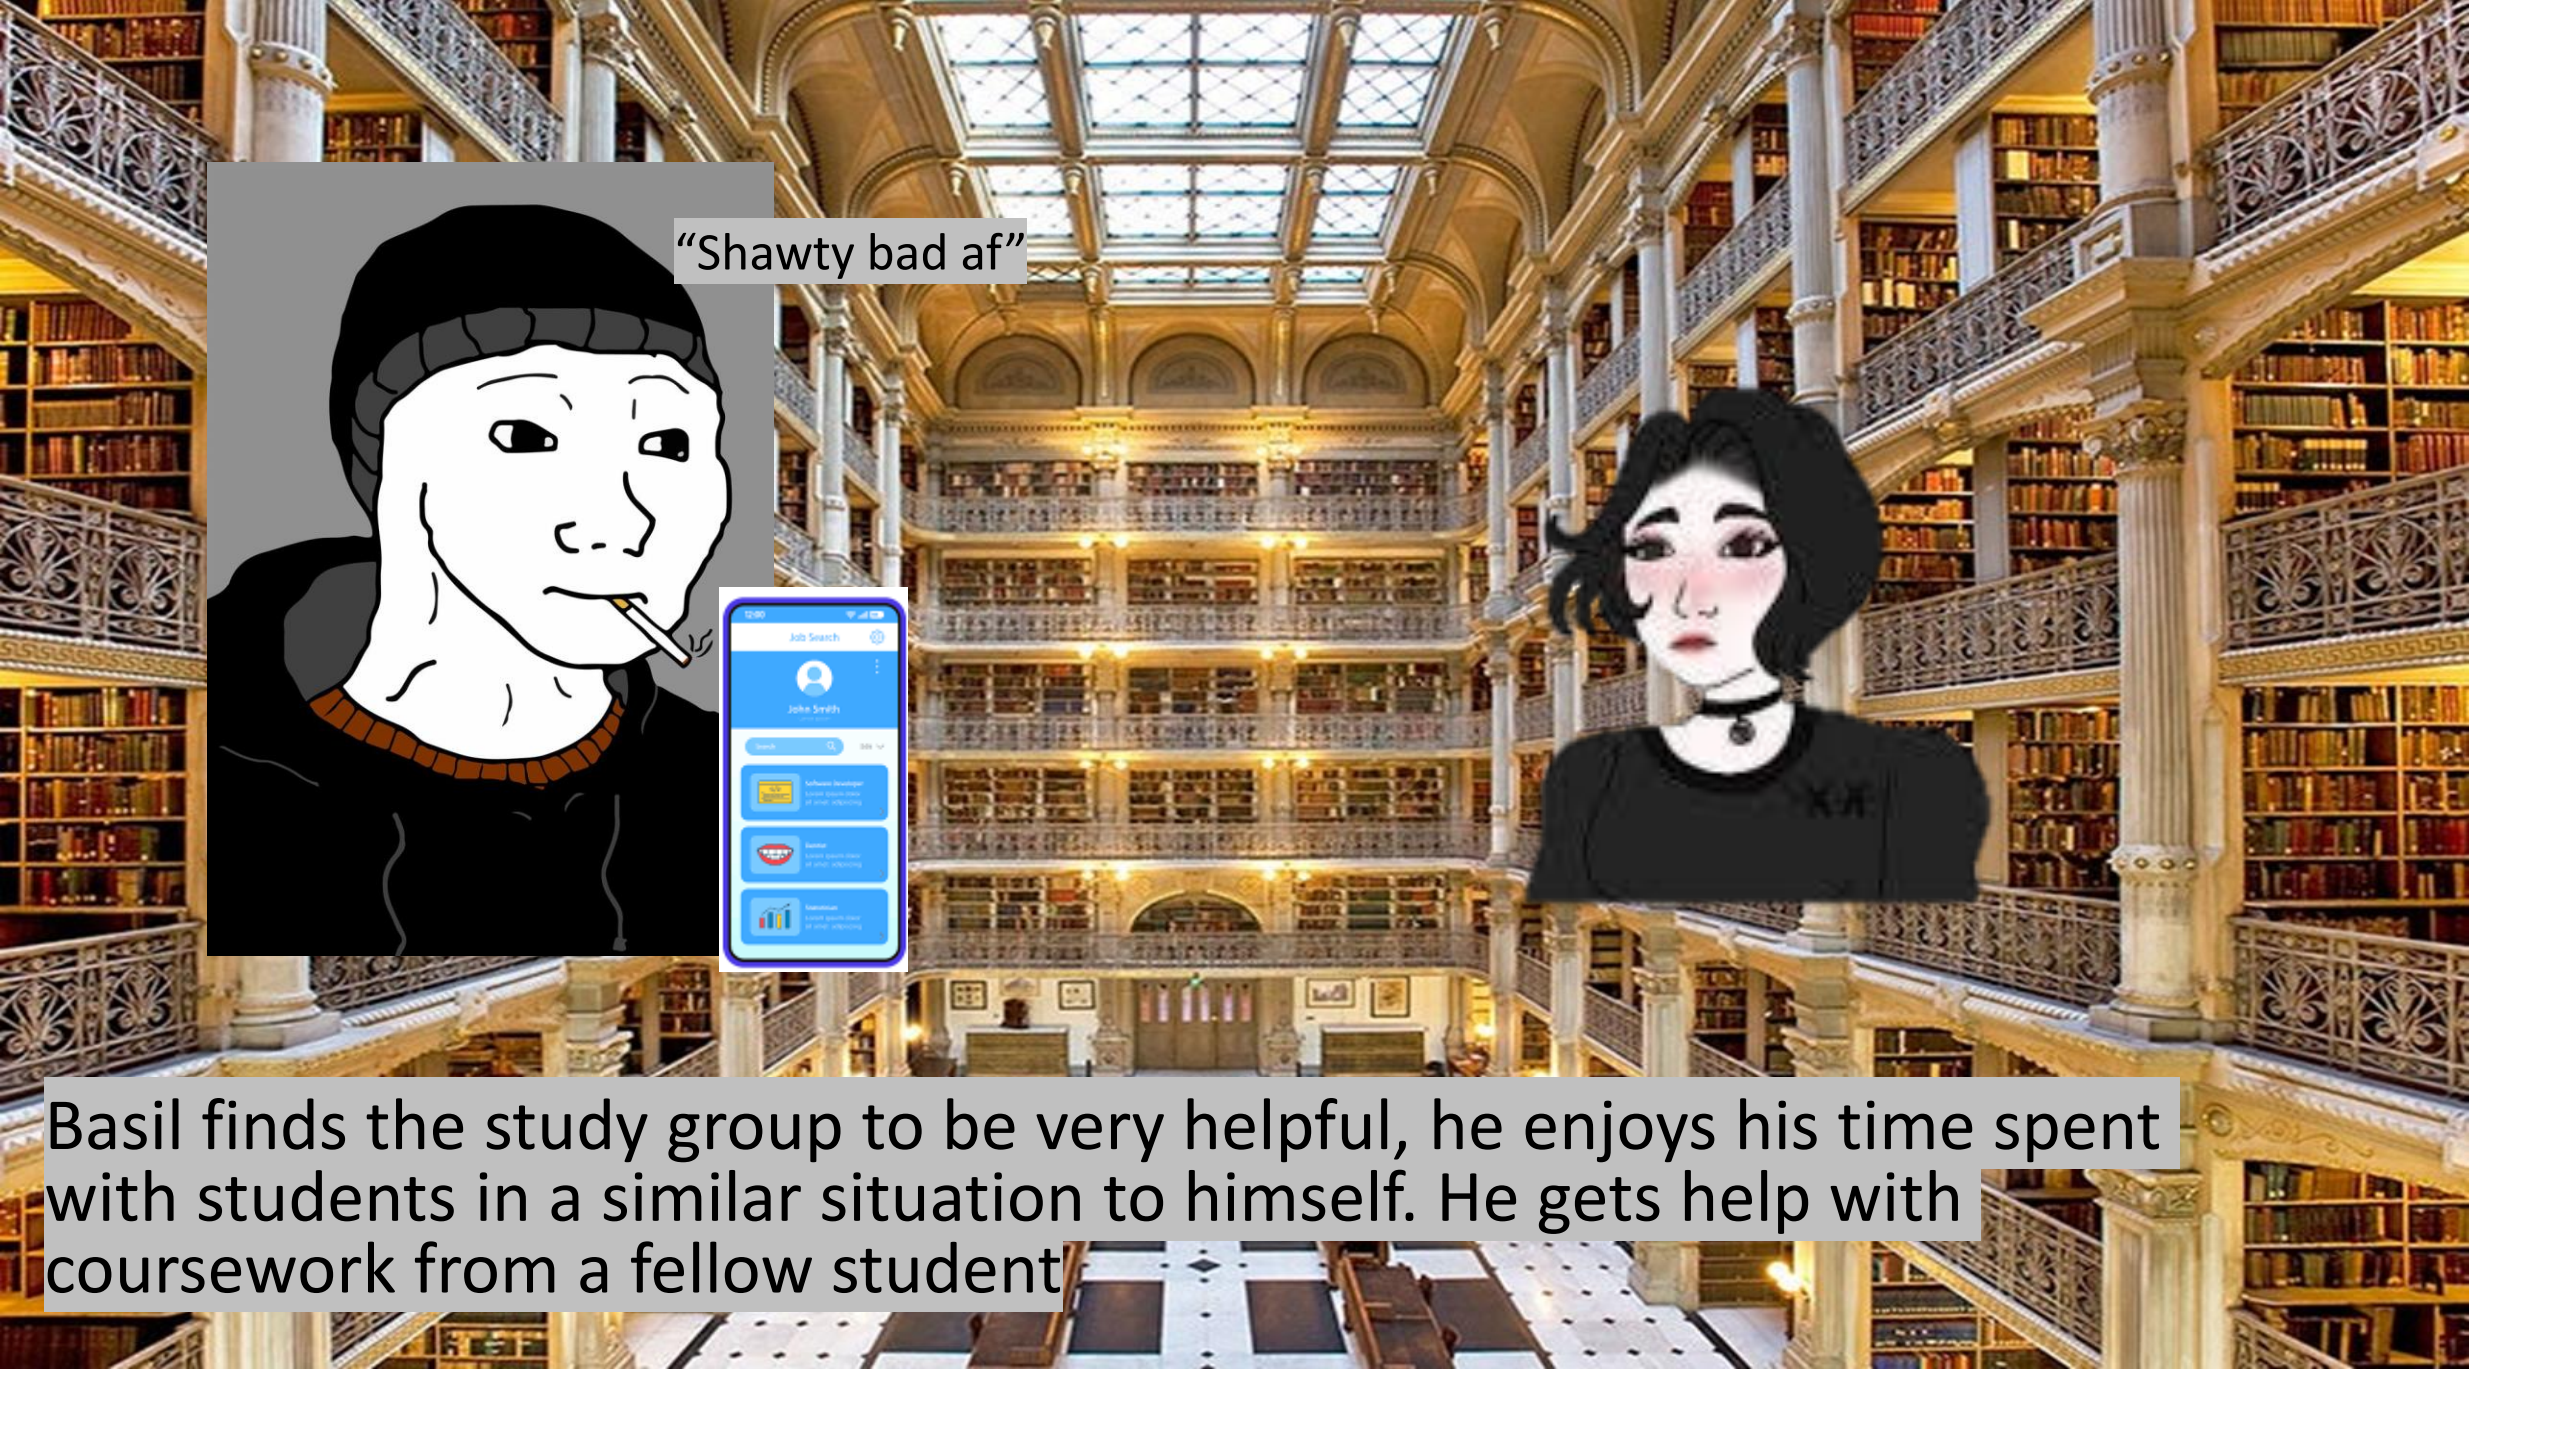

Basil, an incumbent freshman at Prestigious University, finds himself struggling to connect with other students and falling behind in the classroom

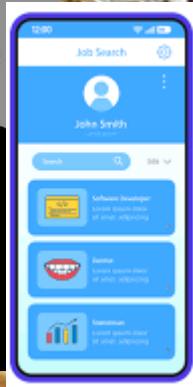

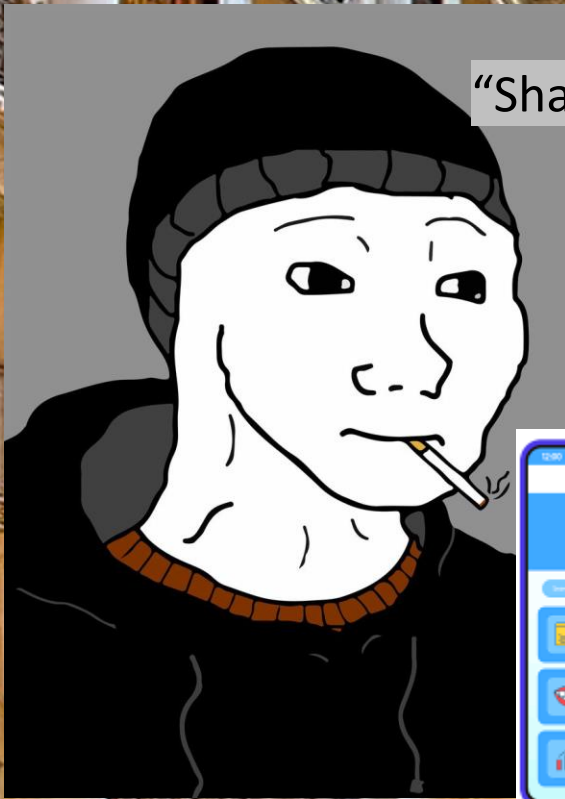

Basil receives his most recent exam back, sadly he has scored poorly and fears he will have to drop out and return home

Rather than accept his fate, basil downloads an app to help him locate study groups on campus. Reluctant to attend due to his social anxiety, he goes to the campus library in order to connect with tutors for his class

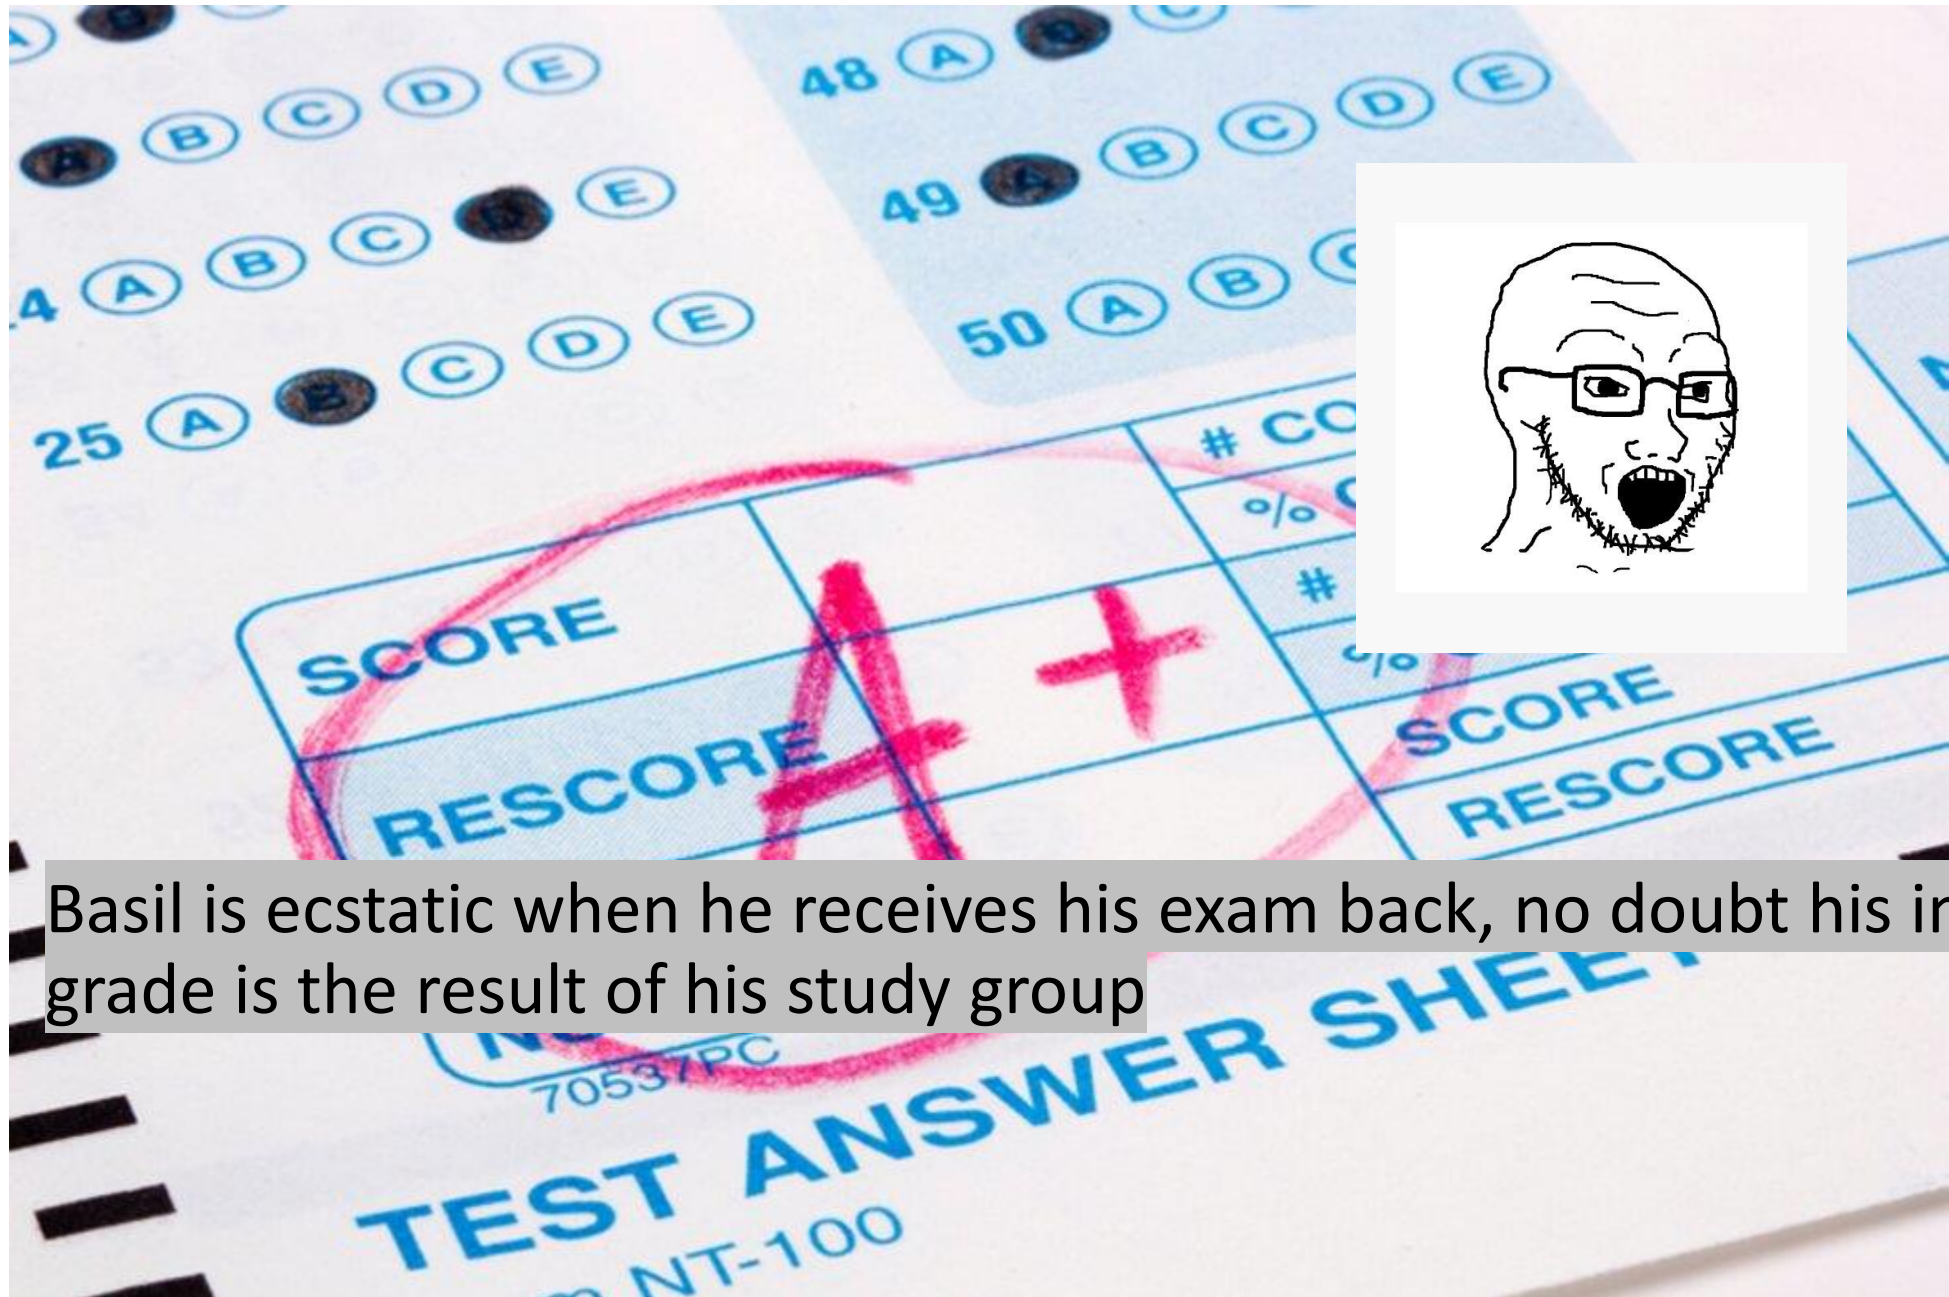

"Shawty bad af"

Basil finds the study group to be very helpful, he enjoys his time spent with students in a similar situation to himself. He gets help with coursework from a fellow student

Basil returns to the classroom for his second exam, optimistic he can achieve a better grade.

Basil is ecstatic when he receives his exam back, no doubt his improved grade is the result of his study group

Basil stays at Prestigious University, now more confident in his academic ability and with a new group of friends

Anthony is currently a sophomore enrolled at the University of South Carolina. Often times Anthony finds himself with lots of homework and exams that he needs to study for.

One night while doing homework Anthony remembers he has a huge test tomorrow in his math class.

Worried that he may do bad on the test with such a short time to study, Anthony calls his friend Jack in his class to meet up with and study. However, when Jack answers the phone he tells Anthony he is sick. Anthony believes he is going to get a bad grade until, Jack tells him about the new studying app.

With no other option, Anthony downloads the new app. Shocked at how easy the sign up process is he begins filtering for his math class. To his surprise he finds a study session for his class which begins in 30 minutes.

Anthony arrives at the study session and notices a lot of people that are in his class. He is very excited he has met a group of people like him that all need help on the math exam for tomorrow.

Although he was very nervous to take the test, Anthony feels very confident. Finally after a week of waiting, Anthony receives his grade on his exam. To his delight he received an A on the test. Overcome with joy Anthony will definitely use this new studying app in the future.
